Acknowledgements

It is right to acknowledge with heartfelt thanks and deepest appreciation the endless support of the IG-HRD professors and administrative employees at Burapha University in Chonburi, Thailand, and the participants of my study at the Eastern Seaboard of Thailand. I am also very thankful to the respected and cooperative personnel at Science Publishing Group, known as SciencePG in New York City, U.S.A.

Preface

This book consists of four chapters. Chapter One explores a background of the topic, the significance of the book, the definitions of the main terms used throughout the book, and a review of related literature, which comprises four sections: these are, (a) the impact of culture on intercultural teams; (b) the role of HRD professionals and their contributions; (c) the concept of competency; and (d) studies related to cross-cultural competencies. Chapter Two describes the methods used to collect, analyze, and organize the comprehension provided in this book. Chapter Three reports what has been discussed with many individuals in international automotive companies in Eastern Thailand. Chapter Four discusses critical aspects of intercultural work environment, and offers recommendations for further investigations.
